"Nook takes a person out of the spotlight and allows for centring and calmness. This is especially true for people on the Autism Spectrum, who have a higher level of need"

Spaces

While event professionals can take measures to minimize noise, harsh lighting, heavily crowded areas, and other potential triggers, sometimes this may not be possible.

In these instances, resilience and recovery spaces like quiet rooms can offer a break away from the main event. These rooms will often feature muted colors, soft lighting, minimal noise, and other supportive tools such as fidget toys and headphones with access to refreshments and event content.

Beyond quiet rooms, professionals can also provide designated spaces for other purposes, such as prayer rooms, no-tech zones, and gaming areas. This way, all attendees benefit and can choose what works for their needs at the moment.

If sensory spaces need to be added to an existing venue or a modular option is preferred, Nook offers solutions for purchase or rental.
